The Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 1990 (CPSIA) was a United States law signed on August 14, 2008 by President George W. Bush. The legislative history of this act includes references to prior legislation such as the Consumer Product Safety Act (CPSA) of 1972 and the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 2008.

The act was a result of a congressional finding that there is a need for better data needed to help make more informed decisions about consumer product safety. The CPSIA was enacted to improve the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) and to add new penalties for non-compliance with safety standards. It also authorized appropriations through FY 1992 for the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 1990. This legislation authorizes appropriations through FY 1992 for the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 1990.

Since the enactment of the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act, and the 2008 amendments, the CPSC has been working with industry and consumer organizations to improve safety standards and to ensure that products are safe for consumers.

The CPSC's mission is to protect the public by helping to prevent product-related deaths and accidents that can result from consumer products. The commission is responsible for developing and enforcing safety standards for a wide range of consumer products, including toys, durable goods, clothing, and household items.

Amendments to the Consumer Product Safety Act (CPSA) have been made in various years to address new safety concerns and to update the law to reflect changes in society and technology. The Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 1990 amended section 5 of the FHSA, by adding a new U.S. Consumer Product Safety Act, as Amended (August 12, 2011 Version).

Since the enactment of the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act, and the 2008 amendments, the CPSC has been working with industry and consumer organizations to improve safety standards and to ensure that products are safe for consumers.

The CPSC's mission is to protect the public by helping to prevent product-related deaths and accidents that can result from consumer products. The commission is responsible for developing and enforcing safety standards for a wide range of consumer products, including toys, durable goods, clothing, and household items.

Amendments to the Consumer Product Safety Act (CPSA) have been made in various years to address new safety concerns and to update the law to reflect changes in society and technology. The Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 1990 amended section 5 of the FHSA, by adding a new U.S. Consumer Product Safety Act, as Amended (August 12, 2011 Version).