A cultural–ecological perspective on early childhood among the Gikuyu in Kenya.

Ngecha: A Kenyan Village in a Time of Rapid Social Change offers many enticements to a Kenya scholar. Written in clear, lucid prose, Ngecha tells the story of the small Kenyan village of Ngecha in the context of rapid social change. The villagers of Ngecha are Gikuyu, a Kenyan tribal group that has been studied extensively. The Gikuyu are divided into several groups, the largest of which is the Gikuyu of the Central Highlands. The village of Ngecha is located in the Central Highlands, where the Gikuyu have traditionally lived. The village is surrounded by mountains and valleys, and is located near the town of Nyeri, the capital of the Central Highlands region. The village is about 300 miles from the capital city of Nairobi, Kenya. The village is a small community of about 500 people, who live in traditional homes made of mud and straw. The village is a typical Kenyan village, with a mix of traditional and modern elements. The villagers of Ngecha are a hardworking group, who take great pride in their work and their families. They are known for their love of music and dance, and their generosity towards visitors. Ngecha: A Kenyan Village in a Time of Rapid Social Change is a fascinating read, and a great introduction to the culture of the Gikuyu people. It is a must-read for anyone interested in the culture of Kenya. The book is available in print or as an e-book, and is published by University of Nebraska Press.
