(Photo: The (Palm Remembering Pearl Harbor - National Geographic Education The causes of the attack on Pearl Harbor stemmed from intensifying Japanese-American rivalry in the Pacific. Japan’s imperial ambitions had been evident from the beginning of the century, and the Japanese government had been planning a military confrontation with the United States for years. Japan’s leaders believed that by controlling the resources of the Pacific, they could gain the wealth and power they needed to become a world power. The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor was a calculated move to gain control of the Pacific and to weaken the United States. The attack came as a surprise to the American armed forces, who were unprepared for such a bold move. The consequences of the attack were far-reaching, leading to the United States’ entry into World War II. The Pearl Harbor attack was a turning point in the war, and it marked the beginning of the end for Japan.
