Policing the national body: sex, race, and criminalization

Jael Miriam Silliman; Anannya Bhattacharjee; Population Committee on Women

Policing the National Body: Race, Gender, and Criminalization. Policing the national body: sex, race, and criminalization: Book. Policing the National Body discusses the policing of bodies by examining the experiences of women prisoners, women with AIDS in correctional facilities, and the lives of women of color. This book explores the ways in which gender and race intersect with policing, highlighting the unique experiences of women in these marginalized communities. It offers a critical perspective on police practices and their impact on women's lives. The book is edited by Jael Silliman and Anannya Bhattacharjee and includes contributions from a diverse range of scholars and activists. It provides a valuable resource for understanding the complex dynamics of policing and gender inequality.

Google Books Result 2. ^ Policing the national body: sex, race, and criminalization Av Anannya Bhattacharjee, Committee on Women, Population, and the Environment, s. 305

Your assignment, Andersen/Hill Collins, Race, Class, and Gender - An Anthology 5e, Policing the National Body: Sex, Race, and Criminalization is ready. Formats and Editions of Policing the national body: sex, race, and criminalization - Google Books Result 2. ^ Policing the national body: sex, race, and criminalization Av Anannya Bhattacharjee, Committee on Women, Population, and the Environment, s. 305