Refracted Modernity: Visual Culture and Identity in Colonial Taiwan

Yuko Kikuchi

Yuko Kikuchi — Department of Film, Media and Cultural Studies. Taiwan is certainly regarded as an economic tiger in Asia, but it has not, until recently, been regarded as a cultural producer. Taiwanese art was studied, if at all, in relation to China or Japan. Refracted Modernity: Visual Culture and Identity in Colonial Taiwan explores the development of Taiwanese art within the context of the Japanese colonial period (1895–1945), and its impact on contemporary Taiwanese society. The nine essays collected here present different perspectives on Taiwanese visual culture and landscape during the Japanese colonial period. The contributors, including Yuko Kikuchi, examine the role of art in expressing and shaping Taiwanese identity and how it has influenced the island's cultural identity in the postcolonial era.

Yuko Kikuchi — Department of Film, Media and Cultural Studies. Taiwan is certainly regarded as an economic tiger in Asia, but it has not, until recently, been regarded as a cultural producer. Taiwanese art was studied, if at all, in relation to China or Japan. Refracted Modernity: Visual Culture and Identity in Colonial Taiwan explores the development of Taiwanese art within the context of the Japanese colonial period (1895–1945), and its impact on contemporary Taiwanese society. The nine essays collected here present different perspectives on Taiwanese visual culture and landscape during the Japanese colonial period. The contributors, including Yuko Kikuchi, examine the role of art in expressing and shaping Taiwanese identity and how it has influenced the island's cultural identity in the postcolonial era.