Charles Francis Annesley Voysey (1857–1941) was an English architect and one of the leading figures of the Arts and Crafts Movement, known for his distinctive style and imaginative designs. Born in Helensburgh, Scotland, Voysey's career was marked by a commitment to creating both practical and aesthetically pleasing environments.

In 1880, Voysey co-founded the Architectural Association, a move which marked a significant step forward in the push for a more ethical and socially conscious approach to architecture. His work was deeply rooted in his belief in the importance of creating spaces that were not only functional but also had a sense of harmony with the natural environment.

Voysey's designs were characterized by their organic forms and the use of natural materials, which were often inspired by his travels and exposure to various architectural styles. One of his most notable works is The Homestead, designed for bachelor Sydney Taylor in 1905.

The Homestead was bought in 2004 by the CFA Voysey Society, which was established to celebrate Voysey's life and work. The society is dedicated to preserving Voysey's legacy and promoting his approach to design.

Today, The Homestead continues to be a testament to Voysey's talent and vision, offering visitors a glimpse into the world of a master architect and his dedication to creating beautiful and practical spaces.
