The American Revolutionary War was fought from 1775 to 1783. It was also known as the American War of Independence. The Revolutionary War, also called the American War of Independence, was a war between the Kingdom of Great Britain and the 13 American colonies. The war began in 1775 with the Battle of Lexington and Concord, and ended in 1783 with the Treaty of Paris, which recognized the United States as an independent nation.

The war was fought on both land and sea. The British and their American allies faced off against the American Revolutionaries and their French allies. The war was marked by a series of battles, including the Battle of Saratoga, the Battle of Yorktown, and the Battle of Trenton.

The American Revolution was a turning point in history, leading to the formation of the United States as an independent nation. The war was fought by a diverse group of people, including colonists, slaves, and Revolutionary War veterans.

The war was not an easy one. The American Revolutionaries faced great difficulty in winning the war, despite having the advantage of being on their own land. The British had a larger army and better technology, but the American Revolutionaries were able to use their knowledge of the land and their determination to overcome these difficulties.

The war was also marked by a series of important events, including the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the capture of British General Cornwallis at Yorktown, and the Treaty of Paris, which ended the war.
