It was during the 1511 maiden voyage that the Mary Rose set sail for the first time. The ship was built as King Henry VIII's flagship, and it was named after his sister, Mary. The Mary Rose was designed as a large, powerful warship, equipped with a double deck above the gun deck, and it was believed to be named Ny Cop or Ny Coep. The Sinking of the Mary Rose History Today

The Mary Rose was King Henry VIII's favourite warship and he named the ship after his sister. The facial reconstructions are part of the aim to humanise the story. The cook of the Mary Rose, believed to be called John Read, was an important figure on board. The cook's role was crucial, and it is believed he had a white beard and a composed expression wearing a yellow shirt and a kerchief.

The Mary Rose sank in 1545 whilst leading the attack against a French invasion fleet in the Solent. Four and a half centuries later, it was raised. The story of the Mary Rose is one of the most fascinating in naval history. A tale of battles fought against the French for over 30 years before sinking off the coast.
